

Which is the correct order of events in speciation? A: Eventually, the isolated population are so different that they are classed as a new species. B: Conditions in the isolated habitat are different to the original habitat. C: Over time, different characteristics will become more common in the isolated population due to natural selection. D: A population of a species becomes isolated.