

A recessive allele controls the development of a characteristic only if the dominant allele is not present.