

A fuel called, mainly methane, can be produced by anaerobic fermentation of a wide range of plant products or waste material containing carbohydrates.