

Reducing the number of steps in the production of food makes the process more energy efficient.