

The mass of living material (biomass) at each stage in a food chain is less than it was at the previous stage.