

An allele which controls the development of characteristics only if the dominant allele is not present is a recessive allele.